Dear James;

Living Beyond Breast Cancer applauds your efforts to produce a publication with the ambition of empowering women (and men) to take control of their health.

A publication of breast cancer information and available resources, accompanied by featured presentations of women photographed with their statements on breast cancer, and how it has impacted their lives and the lives of their loved ones has the potential to be an effective and valuable resource.

The concept of including women who do not have breast cancer, yet have been impacted by the effects of breast cancer on someone who is close to them, i.e. a mother, sister, daughter and even a best friend also demonstrates that breast cancer effects more than the patient herself.

The fact that breast cancer also affects those around that person is often overlooked.

In addition, the approach of having the women pose in a top-free manner could add to the impact by helping women and men alike become more comfortable with their bodies, and therefore more able to make good decisions that will ensure health, wellness and a longer time to spend with and for those that they love.

LBBC wishes you the best in achieving the goals you have set for this project to raise awareness of breast cancer across ages, genders and ethnic groups.

If you can email a flyer with specific criteria and contact information, LBBC may be able to assist you in recruiting women for your work.

In addition, we would be interested, upon completion of your book, in discussing its use as a fundraising tool.

Thank you for making us aware of your work.
